The Royal Nova Scotia Historical Society meets monthly between September and May to hear and to discuss individual papers about personalities, places, and events integral to the history of Nova Scotia.

For more information about the Society, including a list of publications available, visit our website at: RNSHS.CA

Since the establishment of the Society in 1878, 44 volumes of the Society’s Collections have been published. In 1998, the Society began publication of the Journal of the Royal Nova Scotia Historical Society, a successor to both the Collections and the Nova Scotia Historical Review. It is published annually, and Society members receive a copy as well as notification of the Society’s lecture series and general meetings.

The printing trade has always been closely associated with the organization and dissemination of scholarly texts. In modern times, scholarly publishing has evolved into an area of specialization most often undertaken by university presses, but for a range of reasons, trade publishers continue to take on scholarly projects in an attempt to present them to a wider readership. In this illustrated talk, Andrew Steeves will discuss a few examples of works of historical scholarship published in Nova Scotia since 1752, paying attention to the ways in which the design and production of these publications succeed or fail in answering the requirements of their text.

Beginning in the early eighteenth century, British colonizers sought to reform Mi’kmaw people’s concepts and utilization of land through agricultural policies. While the Mi’kmaw never became the agriculturalists the British envisioned, they did participate in sporadic farming activities and made active use of the British legal system. This presentation will argue that although the policies fell short of their intended outcome, Mi’kmaw communities negotiated their pressures and possibilities, managing to alleviate difficult social and economic circumstances through a myriad of treaty expectations and negotiations, friendships, petitions, and gift-giving.

In 1917, the British War Office approved the raising of a Jewish military contingent for active duty in Palestine, which became known as the Jewish Legion. The Imperial Recruiting and Training Depot was established at Fort Edward to serve as a basic training centre and point of departure for all North American recruits. Among the soldiers who trained at Fort Edward was David Ben-Gurion, later to become the first Prime Minister of the State of Israel. This talk will look at the training of the Jewish Legion at Fort Edward, in Windsor, Nova Scotia during the First World War.

A richly illustrated presentation focusing upon an eclectic mix of history, heritage and nostalgia that celebrates the traditions, natural beauty and intrinsic values of Nova Scotia’s woods and waters.

This presentation provides an overview of the Great War service of three siblings from a prominent Pictou County family. Alistair, Margaret Marjorie “Pearl,” and James Gibson Laurier Fraser were the children of Duncan Cameron Fraser and Elizabeth “Bessie” Graham. Alistair and Pearl crossed the North Atlantic to England with the First Canadian Contingent in October 1914, while their youngest sibling, Laurier, enlisted for service in 1916. Their stories encompass the entire course of the war, and highlight the service and sacrifice that was sadly typical of the experiences of many Nova Scotian and Canadian “Great War” families.
